

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A method for optimizing database transaction performance in a database transaction processor having transaction services threads capable of being in active, non-active, and waiting states. The method includes: (a) adding a database change to a top of a queue; and (b) starting a non-active transaction service thread conditioned upon less than a predetermined maximum number of transaction service threads being present.